MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS

Dear Students,

In today's world, information and information technology applications are among the prerequisites for a country's development. Computers, as one of these technological applications, are increasing competition in all sectors. In addition, programs that encompass multiple disciplines simultaneously are becoming increasingly popular and widespread throughout the world. As a result, institutions that use or produce these systems and approaches are in need of specialists who have been trained in this field.

The Department of Management Information Systems was established to meet these needs; it combines the disciplines of management and computer science. With the mission of educating versatile managerial candidates for the creation of information systems that every institution needs, our department aims to equip our students with the necessary experience and skills in our world where data management is constantly increasing. It provides an important opportunity for them to use information and data technologies in strategic decision-making in the public and private sectors. In this context, our graduates can work in various positions such as business analyst, IT consultant, system analyst, web developer, network manager, or IT manager in the public and private sectors. They can also work as innovative and entrepreneurial experts in the private sector and civil society organizations.

If you are ready for a career with these opportunities, we invite you to our Department of Management Information Systems, equipped with a pioneering, successful, and young team, and to Tarsus, home to many civilizations, at the foot of the Taurus Mountains, on the Mediterranean coast, and as old as human history.

Assistant Professor Özlem İpek
